

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An optical isolator is secured so that a direction of polarization permitted to pass through the optical isolator is angled against a direction of polarization of a laser beam entering the optical isolator so that the laser beam transmitted by the optical isolator is attenuated and an optical output from an optical fiber, located at a maximum coupling point, is at a desired level.